

The New York State Survey on Economic Development and Child Care Results

Cultivating Connections Between Child Care and Economic Development Conference

May 24, 2006

Cornell University

Ithaca, NY

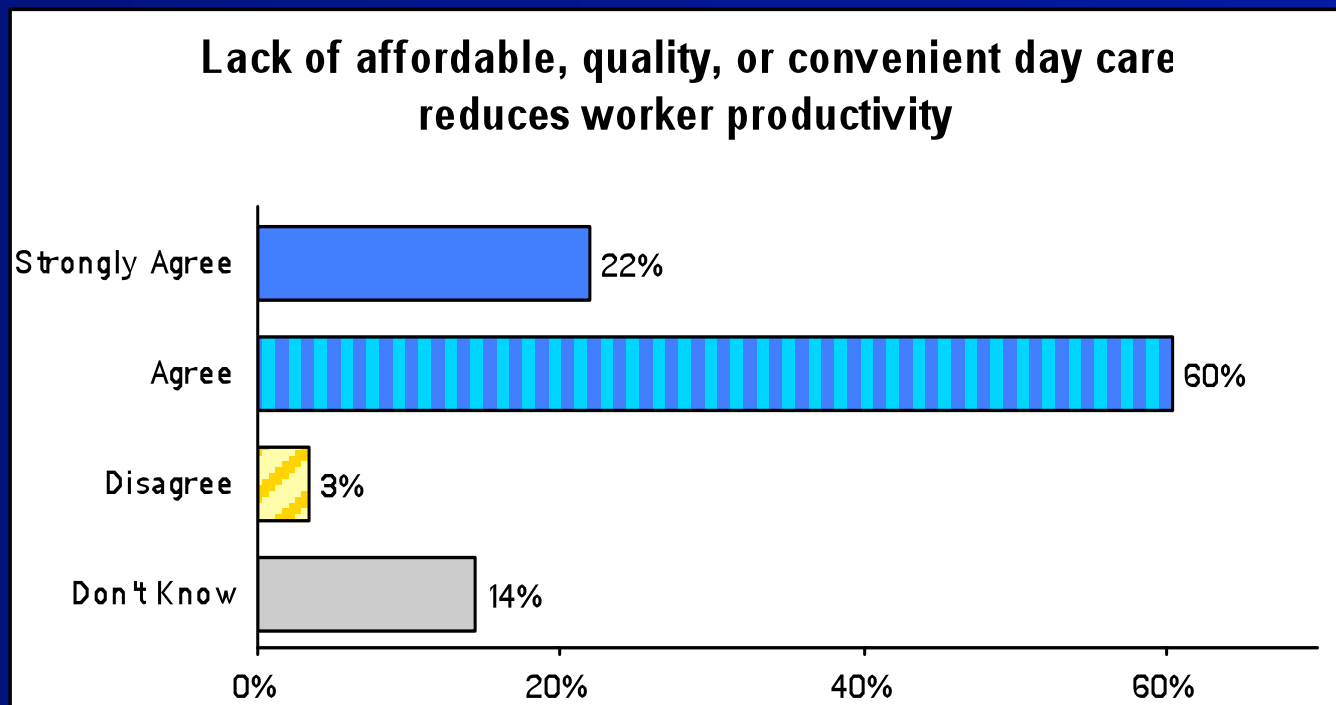

Child Care and the Local Economy

- 8 out of 10 economic development professionals believe that child care should be part of local economic development policy.

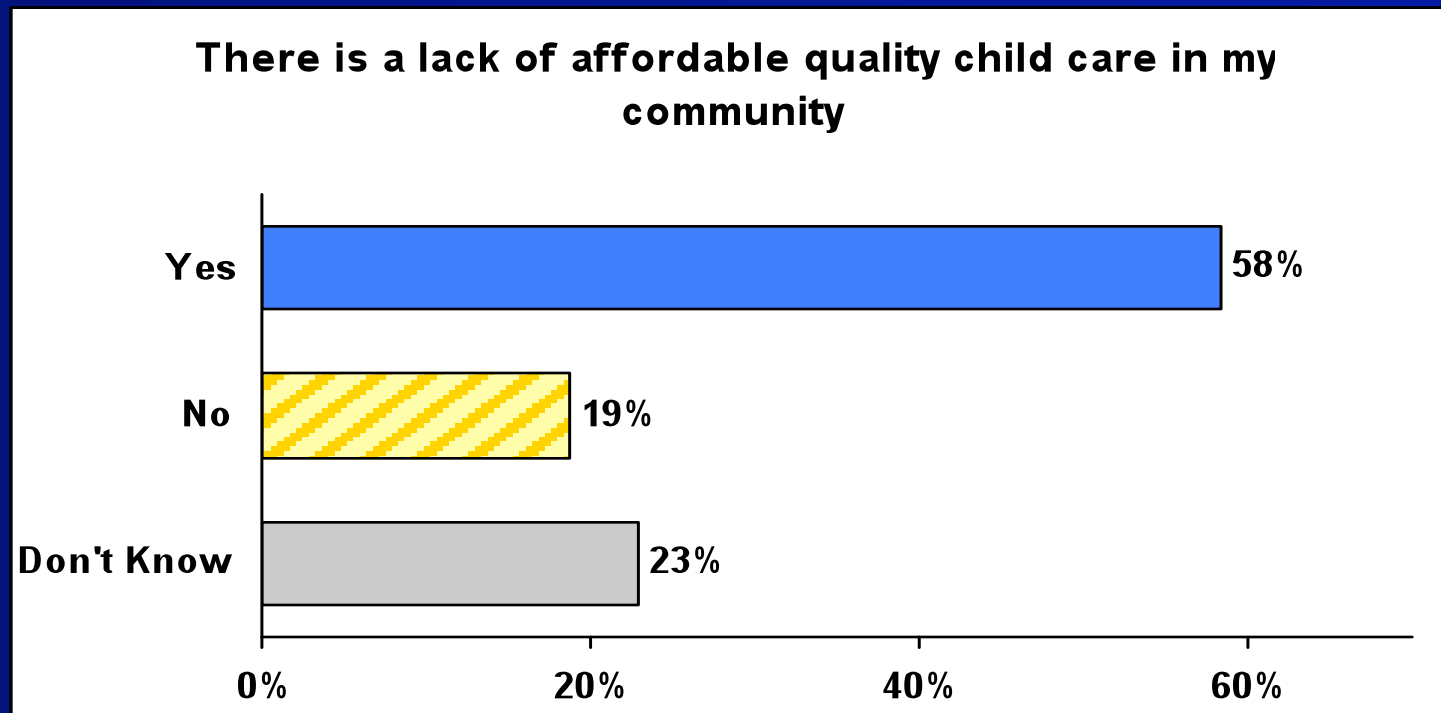

Child Care and Work Productivity

- Over eighty percent of economic development professionals agree that affordable, quality, and convenient care can boost worker productivity.

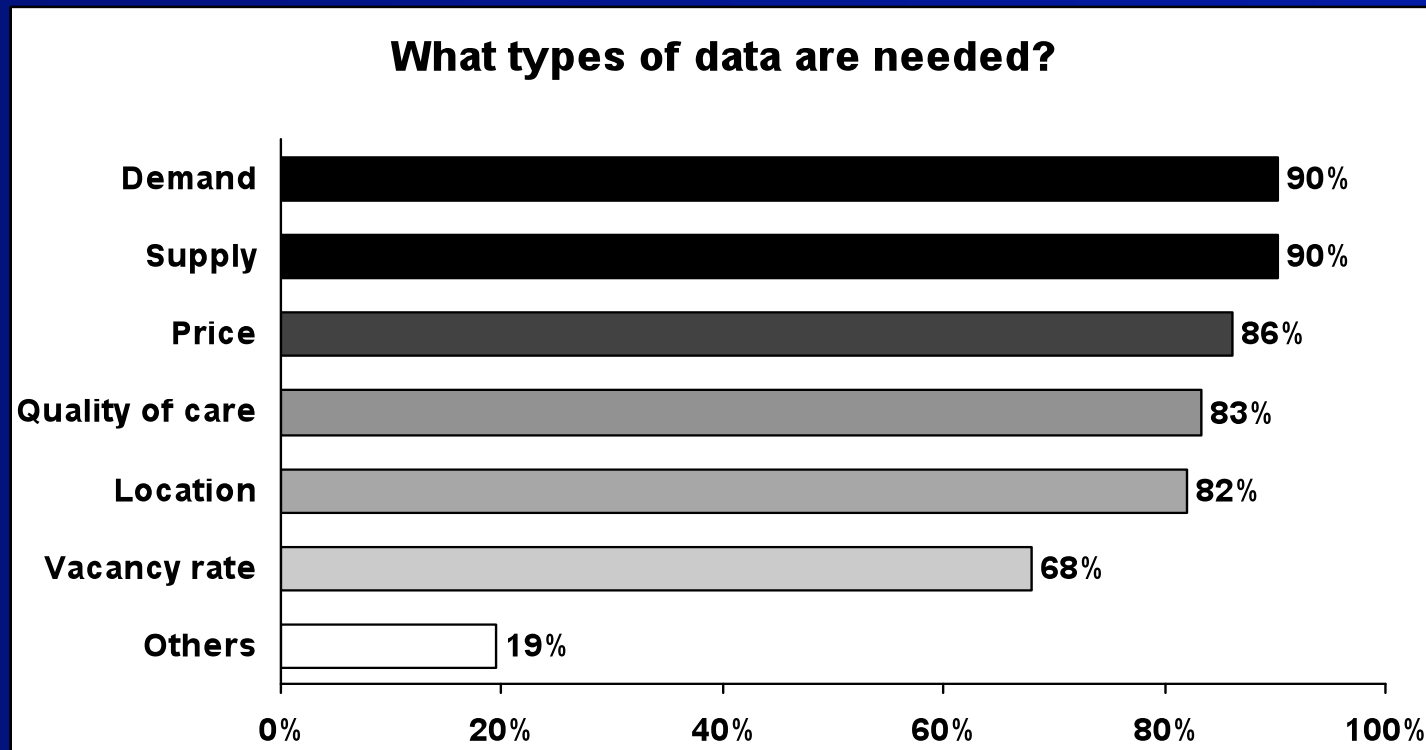

Child Care Supply and Demand

- A majority of economic development professionals agree that there is a lack of affordable child care in their communities.

Data on Child Care

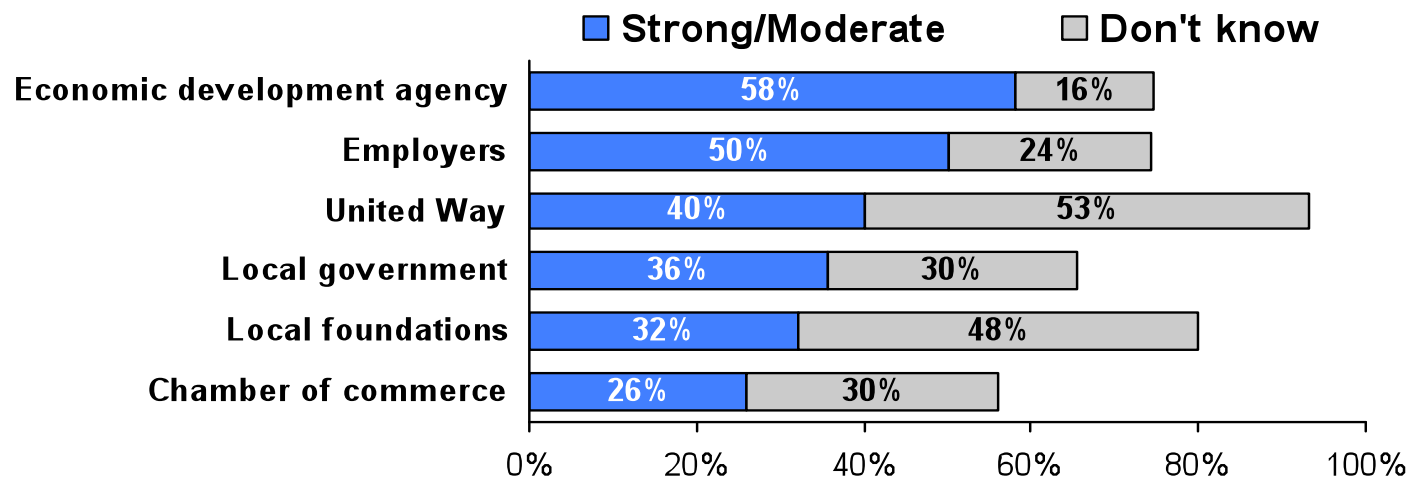

- Better data is needed to fortify the link between child care and economic development in communities.

Partnerships for Child Care

- Diverse partnerships strengthen the link between child care and economic development.

To what extent are the following groups interested in increasing the availability of quality, affordable child care in your community?

Issue Briefs

- Community Coalitions for Child Care
- Labor Force Trends and the Role of Child Care in New York
- Economic Development Planning
- Financing Child Care: Banking Finance and Federal Community Development Funds
- Driving Child Care and Transportation Together